

The scoop on the new pro-life "blockbuster"

They've found a comfy home in the pro-life community, which helped donate more than $2.1 million to a crowdfunding site to create the film, only to wait more than 4 years for it to finally be released.

Why'd it take so long? The judge in the Gosnell case sued them, claiming their book and subsequent film are purposely defamatory, misrepresenting him and harming his reputation in the practice of law.

Abortion opponents use lies like the ones spread by these self-styled journalists to justify restrictions on abortion care in the name of "safety," which have been proven to correlate with WORSE healthcare for women.

Ann McElhinney & Phelim McAleer, creators of an upcoming anti-abortion movie, have built their brand as darlings of Hollywood's conservative filmmaking scene. Most of their documentaries have been efforts to "expose" environmentalism and climate change, but this one is based on a book they wrote about the case of Kermit Gosnell, a sicko who killed women and infants while masquerading as an abortion care provider serving vulnerable communities. Ann & Phelim use his evils to misrepresent abortion providers and what quality care looks like, playing up false narratives of a media and government "cover up" about the safety of abortion care, which is overwhelmingly safe.

Spoiler alert:
That's a crock of lies.
